

Personal website

Jean Legrand | Click here to email me.

I'm a 20 year old economics student at York University in Toronto. Prior to my studies at York, I completed my elementary and secondary education in French, graduating in 2023 from Jeunes Sans Frontières Secondary School with a French Bilingual Diploma. This bilingual background has shaped both my academic identity and my ability to engage with diverse perspectives in global economic discourse. Throughout my studies at York university I became deeply interested in the relation between global economic policies and development of countries, specifically emerging countries and globalization. The effect of free trade, protectionism, foreign investments which global powers lead to establish a form of neo-colonialism. This extends into the involvement of international organizations such as IMF, World Bank, and WTO in the financial management of emerging countries. My goal is to develop policies to support emerging countries in developing long term economic resilience during global integration.

Research

I'm interested in researching the effects of globalisation. How has globalization affected income inequality and the effect of globalization on developing countries, if the impact is positive or does it hurt the development of said country. Does globalization lead to neo-colonialism?

612 × 408

<https://www.istockphoto.com/photos/economics> 612 × 408

Feel free to steal this website's source code. Do not scrape the HTML from this page itself, as it includes analytics tags that you do not want on your own website — use the github code instead. Also, consider using Leonid Keselman's Jekyll fork of this page.